

DREW DUDLEY

THE FOLLOW UP SESSIONS

MORE THAN WORDS

DEFINING THE THINGS THAT DEFINE LEADERS

Integrity. Honesty. Respect. Accountability.

How would you explain what these words mean to someone who had never heard them before?

A companion to both The Leadership Test and This is Day One keynote, this highly interactive session will ask participants to engage in a deeper, collective examination of the values we use to evaluate leaders, and often to evaluate ourselves. After all, there's little doubt we judge others swiftly (and often harshly) if they don't live up to the values we generally associate with leaders. However, when was the last time you really examined what the various "desirable leadership values" actually mean? This workshop will challenge participants to do just that, and in the process, define the things they want to define themselves personally.

Following this workshop, participants will:

- Understand how defining values is essential to living values
- Have practiced the process of "operationalizing leadership values"—a key aspect of the Day One Leadership philosophy
- Be able to effectively translate leadership values into everyday leadership behaviours

Approximate length: 1–2 hours

ALL DAY ONES ARE DIFFERENT

BETTER LEADERSHIP THROUGH UNDERSTANDING SOCIAL STYLES

Designed as a follow-up to either The Leadership Test or This is Day One keynote, this highly interactive session illustrates how differences in values can lead to dramatic differences in the way individuals process the world and communicate with others. The miscommunication and conflict that arise from these differences can quickly poison an organization's culture and stand in the way of collaboration and growth.

This workshop's hands-on simulations will provide participants with skills and insights to more effectively understand and communicate with those who have different value structures and social styles. Participants will have the opportunity to evaluate their own social style and examine the characteristics of other typical styles within the Merrill-Read Model. They will leave the workshop with a better understanding of their own approach to leadership and communication and a greater awareness of the other styles with which they must interact in order to be an effective personal, team, and organizational leader.

Following this workshop, participants will:

- Understand their personal social style and how it impacts their approach to work, communication, problem solving and acting on their core leadership values
- Recognize the most common sources of conflict between the different social styles and how they can be avoided
- Possess a toolkit of strategies for identifying and adapting to the needs and values of the other styles
- Recognize the benefits of creating teams with diverse perspectives, skills and values

Approximate length: 1.5–2.5 hours

YOUR PERSONAL DAY ONE

DEFINING THE THINGS THAT DEFINE YOU

A companion to The Leadership Test keynote, this interactive session will expose participants to the process through which the six questions of The Leadership Test were created and provide step-by-step instructions on how they can create their own personalized version of the Test.

Drew will walk participants through the discovery of their personal leadership values, demonstrate how those values can be translated into daily behaviours and illustrate how values-based decision-making leads to individual and organizational success.

Following this workshop, participants will:

- Understand the importance of developing and communicating a personal leadership philosophy
- Have surfaced their core daily leadership values
- Possess a customized “Leadership Test” designed to operationalize their personal leadership values
- Understand the link between personal value clarity and personal pride, engagement, productivity and happiness

Approximate length: 1.5–3 hours
